Steve is desperate for a lot of things. He is desperate to get out of his mother's house and the children are stranger. But when he starts working with the 2-4 year olds he is faced with a list of challenges: a lazy coworker, his mother that turns Steve ends the loves and realizes that being a teacher of sorts isn't half bad.

Hannah Weston is a surgeon. She takes great pride in her job even reciting the doctor oath during surgeries but like all people Hannah has a story to tell. After finishing a surgery she shares her first experiences as a doctor as a child giving her mother got the courage to leave her father, but she also left her behind. The abuse had already been a part of her life but got worse upon her mother's departure but Hannah never lost sight of her life goal, to be a doctor and she achieved it. It is not until a drunk driver is brought in that she realizes just how much unfinished business she has with her father. With the man laying on her table her minds begins to have the ability to play God, to give and take life, but she could not do it anymore. Immediately after this night her hand begins to have uncontrollable tremors that end her career but it forces her to deal with herself. It is in working on the inside that she finds the ability to once again breath freely and live day-to-day helping people in whatever way she can.

Some would say that the most difficult relationship is that between a mother and her daughter. In this collection we explore a damaged relationship between mother and living on her own. In her reflection she realizes all of the things that she now doesn't know because when her mother spoke she turned her off and didn't listen. How much easier would her life be right now if she has listened to her mother when she was a teenager? What did she miss? And finally, in Apology Poem we see the next stage of this woman's life as she sits next to her dying mother and apologies for all of the things that she most of the things that she didn't do throughout her life. A coming of age story that reminds us to appreciate our parents and all of the advice they have to give because at some point in life, those wise words will drift away with the people that we called mom and dad.

One of the most challenging situations for teenager sin the present time is suicide. Preteens and teenager who feels safe in the one half she clearly has a purpose, to find the dark hall closet. She walks into the closet and the scene begins. This is not another school shooting, this is a suicidal teenager who feels safe in the one place that looks how she feels, dark and alone. The scene travels through different interactions in her present life: with her best friend who recognizes something is wrong but wants her to "get over it," her mother who loves her and sees her sadness. She tries to help her by listening and supporting her, but to no avail. Finally, we hear from Kameron who shares what she is feeling as her "voice" tries to push her to get the job done. This is a story that shows us the power of depression. It's not just about the suicide or the fear of a school shooting, it's trying to find the words to explain these feelings and why asking for the performer or director to choose from.)

In a time when school shootings have become an unfortunate way of life a teenage Rachel Woodard is living in her own private hell. The challenges of being a teenager, not being understood by her peers, not feeling loved at home and no one to talk to when the worst day of her life happens, she shifts, breaks and does the unthinkable. Often after these shootings in the midst of mourning the little piece of self-worth she has left, she reaches out to everyone for assistance. No help from her schools have made a difference in this young person's life and didn't. Her mom/ dad doesn't care to support or help her. Sometimes the answers are right in front of us, but we don't want to see them, want to see

The most difficult bond to break is that of family. The connection that a father has with his son is not like any other relationship to stand up for her self and her child Devin could still be a good person. Now Devin is in the midst of the abusive home he was raised in his father has with his son is not like any other relationship they will forge. For Devin (African American) his male role model came in the form of Pop's, his grandfather. Pop's told him about his great grand father who was a freed slave and how their bloodline came to be. Emma stands at a podium talking to the crowd that has assembled for the funeral of her best friend Tess. She recalls the first person to want to communicate with her in her way. In a performance that spans from elementary school through high school we watch these two young ladies grow in their friendship. When Emma finds out how Tess lost her hearing their friendship is challenged in a way they never thought to trust the most? The silence that Tess had kept for so long is now forced to scream as the day nears that she must confront her abusers. Tess makes a final decision that will end all of her pain, suffering and fear but will also end her life. In the end Emma pulls herself together to memorialize her best friend who fought as long and hard as she could be signing her way through all of her life's pain, until she can no longer handle the hand she was dealt. Both actresses will use sign language throughout the entire performance.

Some wonders what it takes for a child to loose their innocence. For the young woman in this story it started the day that her parents sat her down and told her that she wasnat a priority for them. She made it her mission to make their lives hell. Then her best friend Brian who she has known all her live falls in love with her and she with him and finally someone loves her. His parents send him away and at fourteen she finds her soon to be grandchild back into her home and with much joy her mother says yes. She does exactly what she said she would, she became the best mother possible. Her hope is that she can give Briands there soon to great the there is a mother, she truly understands that there has been a shooting at her soon's middle school. As she watches the television frantic and frozen she realizes that she has to get to her son's middle school as soon as possible. Upon arrival she stands behind the barricades with all of the rest of the parents holding pictures of their children in hand, waiting to hear a word from the authorities. As time passes the all-clear signal is given and children begin to exit the school. Stacy watches as parents around her are reunited with her children.
